On June 14, 1966, the Landmarks Preservation Commission held a public hearing on the proposed designation as a Landmark of St. Paul's Chapel, Columbia University and the proposed designation of the related Landmark Site. (Item No. 37). The hearing had been duly advertised in accordance with the provisions of law. Two witnesses spoke in favor of designation. There were no speakers in opposition to designation. In a letter to the Commission, Grayson Kirk, President of Columbia University, said that the University was "happy to accept this designation."

DESCRIPTION AND ANALYSIS

St. Paul's Chapel attains an altogether pleasing dignity from its beautiful proportions and handsome architectural details. This brick building with limestone trim is highlighted with terra cotta ornament and ornamental bronze carefully integrated into an harmonious ecclesiastical design. Because of its Greek cross plan, surmounted by a high drummed dome over the crossing and its four columned portico (porch) with a Florentine gable, this Byzantine Chapel displaying much Italian Renaissance detail makes an attractive contribution to American architecture.

This small chapel is set within a landscaped area east of Low Memorial Library, and is well sited among the buildings on the Columbia campus. Flanking the low rise of steps leading into the main porch are two handsome bronze torchers. The unusual columns of the vaulted portico instead of having classic capitals are topped by winged cherubs. Large bronze doors, handsomely enframed, provide a fitting entrance for the Chapel. At the east end the building terminates in a semi-circular apse. The north and south transept walls are pierced by large, arched windows of great beauty.

The Chapel, bearing the inscription, "For the Church of God, was a gift of Olivia and Caroline Stokes in memory of James Stokes and his wife Caroline Phelps. The twenty four windows in the drum of the dome are adorned with the arms of notable old New York families, whose names are associated with the history of the University, and include such prominent names as Philip Van Cortlandt, Abraham Peyster, Gerard Beckman, DeWitt Clinton, and William C. Rhinelanders."
